Circus Man In
Tien Tsin War

of Tien Tsin without knowing where they were. For want of a main body they were practically ambushed, being attacked by a big Chinese force. The Americans were repulsed and retreated for seventeen miles being obliged to leave many of their wounded behind.

Mutilating Wounded.

By the way, they saw the Chinese take up some of the American wounded and cut them to pieces and the boxes out the head off a wounded American and carried it off. The column had a hearty reception as each contingent passed the Gordon Hall, and it was a sight one could never forget. Only those who have experienced it can feel the real horrors of war and the depth of gratitude to their relievers. Willing hands soon placed such refreshments as were available at the disposal of the troops and that night, for the first time, we had a chance to sleep with our boots off. On Sunday, 24th of June, the relief column was too fatigued with the suspense and weariness of fighting, to do anything but rest. Admiral Seymour's rocket signals were again seen.
On Sunday night a relief column of 1000 Russians, 300 British marines, and 200 International marines started to relieve Admiral Seymour's command.
They found them encamped six miles from the Settlement in the arsenal, their last possible stand, unable to move for the number of wounded and dead. They reported that when ten miles from Tien Tsin, the train was surrounded by Boxers who quickly destroyed the telegraph lines, bridges and railway line, cutting the column off from all reinforcements. They had to do or die and they fought day after day with daily increasing casualties till within twenty miles of Peking, when the situation became so hopeless that a retreat was ordered. The fighting during the retreat was even more severe. Halfway back they were unable to carry the wounded for want of stretchers and they were put on junkies while the others fought along the river banks till they reached the arsenal.
They could not take the place by rifle fire, and as in the affair at the railway, the bayonet charge was ordered as a last resource. The men scaled the mud walls and encamped there as a final station. Immense stores of ammunition, rifles and field guns of latest type were found there. We had only a few field pieces in the Settlement, but the arsenal was fired and the guns tumbled into the Peiho, the relief being wholly occupied in attending their wounded and burying their dead. Two Americans were killed outright while burying a comrade.

"For two hours the long procession carrying its dead and wounded came down Victoria Road, a woefully graphic picture of the miseries of war. On Tuesday, the 26th of June, a united international advance on an arsenal three miles distant from the Settlement was made and proved the hottest battle of the siege so far, raging without intermission until 3 p. m., with very conflicting fortunes, as witnessed from Gordon Hall tower. Finally the place was captured by a desperate bayonet charge. These charges have achieved all the victories we have won. The want of cavalry and of tugs and lighters are the two great needs of Tien Tsin.

"Another and procession of killed and wounded came to the hospital after the battle. On the 27th there was the same bombardment and fustling all round and fires again made night luminous, this time the flames being right in the Settlement, feeding on vast stores of rice, sugar, etc., so urgently needed by the troops. On the 28th we had a comparatively quiet day, and life actually seemed stale and unprofitable minus the daily hail of death dealing shot and shell. The enemy showed they were still in our vicinity on the 29th by more shelling. There was great anxiety about the arrival of reinforcements. For the first time we have realized the immense strides the Chinese have made in modern warfare since they fought the Japanese, and wonder at their resistance. Saturday, the 30th of June—A shell came crashing into the hospital, spreading debris among the wounded and making a hole a man could go through. The shell, fortunately, did not explode. 1st July Captain Bayley ordered every civilian, except those willing to go to the front, to leave at a few hours' notice by tugs and lighters. 2d July—I left in a tug, towing a lighter full of wounded soldiers, for the fleet. The muddy Peiho was lined on both banks with hundreds of dead Chinese in all stages of decomposition, beheaded and mutilated in every way. They are supposed to be Quantonese and other friendly Chinese, killed by Boxers. The stench was something terrible, and the authorities fear cholera or some pestilence. The retreats were running low when we left.
By the way, Admiral Seymour's command is on-quarter rations and whatever horseflesh is to be had.

"We went aboard the British transport Hallooing, which was discharging stores and provisions about twenty miles from Taku. At noon on the Fourth of July the fleet fired a salute of twenty-one guns. On the 5th refugees were pouring in and crowding the already well filled ship. The ship the Tien Tsin people were housed in was more like a floating poorhouse, so destitute were the people on her. There were several women in a delicate state of health on board, and they were living in coolie quarters 'tween decks.
These people had given every care to the wounded and lost all they had, and they should have been better cared for. The American Admiral sent for his people, and the Russians took off their nationals, but a strongly worded petition had to be sent to Admiral Horne, and he next day gave the British the option of coming here by the Hainchi or going to Nagasaki by the Hailong.

"At Tien Tsin Captain Bayley com-mandered all our horses and such as were fit were used for drawing cannon, while others were slaughtered for food. I heard that our two mules were seen floating down the river dead. All through this trying time, the women and children behaved splendidly, being of wonderful good cheer and spirits."

Kind of a Man
Capt. Reilly Was

Many an interesting and startling incident is now being told of the late Captain Henry J. Reilly, the commander of Company F of the Fifth United States artillery, an organization that was known throughout the country and a good section of the world as "Reilly's battery." Reilly had ideas of his own about artillery methods, and much of his great success in thirty-six years' duty in this branch of the service may be credited thereto.
Every man in Reilly's battery, for instance, wore his khaki coat, rain or shine, no matter how hot it might be.
They might leave off their shirts if they wanted to, and most of them did, but they had to wear the coat. Reilly thought the blue shirts made too good a target for the enemy, and that he was right is proved by the fact that despite the many engagements Reilly's battery was in, the casualties were always comparatively few. In garrison or camp Reilly never allowed a man to drink water that had not been boiled; he looked after his men as if they were all his sons, and they were and are today the healthiest and strongest men in the United States army. Another Reillyism was that none except commissioned officers should carry sabres and revolvers, it being his theory that the work of the men would be more efficient if they depended solely upon their guns.

"What if your guns were attacked from ambush some day while the horses were attached and you could not use your guns?" was asked him one day, and his simple answer was:
"Our guns are never where they can not be brought into instant action."

When on the march Reilly had each gun attached to the ammunition wagon by a rope some twenty feet long. In a second's time the rope could be let out, and the gun was ready for action with the horses attached and moving. During the Santiago campaign Reilly's battery made the infantry footsore, and his bringing up of the guns from Bal-quair was a piece of work that the foreign attaches thought an impossible task.

"These guns can go wherever cavalry can go," Reilly would always reply, when asked by a general if he could go so and so, and he always kept his word.
Surgeon Robinson, who served with the battery two years, says:

"To a civilian the recklessness of Reilly's men in driving caused a shudder. Down embankments into a morass of mud, wader and rank growth the heavy guns would be dragged, half falling; the six ambitious horses plunging, snorting and pitching, drivers and gunners using whips, tugging at bridles, spattered and gasping, their faces black with slimy water. On the bank would be the captain, certain that one more tug all together would save ten miles to and from a bridge that might be down. At times those feats cost horses, but nobody ever accused Reilly of unnecessary usage of an artillery animal."

Reilly always held himself in the background, as was made plain when his battery was the great feature at the military tournament in Madison Square Garden in 1898. The battery almost monopolized the honors of that tournament, but a lieutenant was always in command and Reilly sat in some obscure seat in citizen's clothes. Reilly was to the artillery what Lawton was to the infantry.
